ATTN: Raid Ant Traps Department

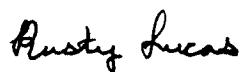

Dear Raid Ant Traps:

Do you make any devices that attract ants? I used to live in a one floor apartment and I often had ants come in through my heaters or cracks in the walls where the carpet ended and they would march in little lines to where pieces of food had been dropped and forgotten. Me and my pet cat Booyah used to lay on the floor for hours watching as the ants would march back and forth feasting on a graham cracker crumb or a piece of corn flake.

When it came time for my annual apartment inspection, my landlord put down what he CALLED ant motels. I thought that the ants would spend the night in these small little shelter areas and then travel back home the next day, saving them from having to make the whole round trip in one day. How Nice! I only later came to find out that these devices actually trapped and killed the ants with poison! I couldn't believe that my landlord would do such a hateful thing and I decided right then and there that I could not live in a place that treats creatures of God that way, so I moved into a high rise downtown. They assured me that they never used ant motels in any of the apartment units. That, plus the community shower room and rose garden shared by all of the other residents, were the final selling factors.

The problem I am having that you may be able to help me with is that Booyah and I really miss spending time watching all the little ants go marching. I have tried, but have been unable to lure any ants up to my place on the 8th floor. I've tried all kinds of food items, some have been sitting there for about 7 months now with no ants at all! Do you make any ant attractor items WITHOUT the poison? I miss watching them march along in their lines. But I don't want to force any ants up to my apartment against their own free will.

Sincerely,

Rusty Lucas

p.s. Do you have any company baseball caps with your Raid logo on them or any other baseball caps that somehow embody your ant killing company? I wondered if I might be able to get a free baseball cap as compensation for the ants (I DO think of them as ants) that were killed through
