Dear ALE Foundation,

I was out drinking with some buddies of mine the other day and we ran into, of all people... Ben Affleck! He was apparently in town to scope out some lake front property, but I really can't be sure where. He was wearing a disguise and kept a pretty low profile, but my buddy Stimson recognized him when they were standing next to each other at the bar. Without creating a scene, Stimson told Ben that he knew who he was and promised not to blow his cover, but struck up a friendly conversation with him. A few minutes later, Ben was sitting at our table and he bought us all a round of ale. I'm not sure where Jennifer was, but I have to assume that she stayed back in California, or wherever, to tend to their new baby.

We had a good time just shootin the bull and talking about his new baby and what kind of person mommy Jennifer is. Then my other buddy, Gerald, brought up his old relationship with J. Lo. No matter how much he pleaded, Ben would not give Gerald her phone number. After a few hours, we decided to blow that place and hit the tiki bar at a local indoor water park. Gerald knew some off-duty nurses that sometimes hung out over there. We obviously invited Ben to come along. By this time, we were all like old buds, so we weren't at all surprised when he agreed. But when we got there, there weren't any nurses, just some loud mouthed drunk men trying to hit on anything that walked by. So we left there and just went back to Stimson's place to hang out.

It had just snowed about a foot that afternoon. Ben even commented that he wasn't so sure this area would be a good place to build a summer home, but we assured him that northern Ohio on the Lake was absolute paradise in the summer. When Paulo suggested that we go out back and make snow angels, Ben seemed to hesitate, but we had all had enough beer that we didn't think it was that corny of an idea. It actually seemed brilliant at the time.

When we got tired of angels, Ben was complaining about having a full bladder. So I talked him into peeing his name into the snow in Stimson's back yard. I didn't think he would really do it, but he did! What a weird night that turned out to be! Ben went back to his hotel early that morning. Stimson gave him his phone number, but the rest of us figured that it would be weird and overwhelming if we each gave Ben our numbers, so I haven't spoken to him since then. Ben was a heck of a nice guy and he seemed to genuinely have fun hanging with us and making snow angels, but the reality of the situation is that I will likely never see or hear from him again. I doubt that he remembers much of what happened that night he met up with me and the guys. So unless he actually closes on that property he was looking at, I don't imagine I will have another chance to get Ben Affleck's snow autograph. (When he didn't call that first night, Stimson, Gerald, Paulo, and I drew straws to see who got to keep the snow autograph and I won!)

It is still pretty cold outside and I want to preserve this treasure. My question to you is how do I do it? This is a real collector's item that would fetch a really good price on eBay I am sure. But I want to keep it myself and maybe put it on display in my house. Is there an easy way to cut out this section of snow and to keep it frozen solid, yet prominently displayed in an indoor facility?

I know that you have Teddy Ballgame in your deep freeze, and with Ben Affleck being such an avid Sox fan, I figured that maybe you could help me. I realize that this is different from preserving a human head or body or whatever it is that you save, but I would think that it is easier to preserve frozen snow than it is to preserve frozen human body parts. Hopefully you can give me some assistance at an affordable price.

Please help me to preserve my memento of meeting Ben Affleck.

Sincerely,

p.s. Even if you cannot help me, would you please send me an autographed Ted Williams Red Sox cap! Or if you are out of those, a free Alcor Life Extension Foundation baseball cap will do.
